Subject: Microsoft Settlement

I think the current Microsoft settlement does little or nothing to guarantee that Microsoft will no longer be a predatory monopoly. I am not an expert in any area of computer science, but it is patently obvious to me that the settlement is woefully inadequate; the current settlement does nothing but endorse Microsoft's current attitude.

This case is not about what has happened in the past... It is about what will happen in the future, and suggesting that Microsoft's past actions merit anything but an exemplary punishment bodes ill for the future.

I am a US citizen, but have lived overseas most of my life, and I must say that this kind of a settlement puts the US judicial system in a very poor light. From a foreigner's perspective it seems like Microsoft is above the law.
